SULIS (solar ultraviolet light-induced sterilization) is a solar powered water purification system for communities without access to clean water, whether they are in developing countries or recovering from natural disasters. The team's research shows that using ultraviolet light the technology could sterilize 12 liters of water in seven hours.

Team SULIS from Rutgers University is piloting its project in association with Ganpat University. Student Team of both the university are working on this cross border collaborative project in India. They are doing piloting of device, water testing both pre and post test, customer acquisition, R&D for revised design in context with Indian consumers etc. Cofounders of SULIS Mr Anurag Modak, Ms Sarah Pomeranz, Mr Ari Mendelow and Mr Yuki Osumi under the guideline of Prof MUKESH PATEL (Founder Director - Innovation Lab, Rutgers University) and around 25+ students from Ganpat University along with professors, mentors and advisor are working on this collaborative project. The Team SULIS headed for Hult Prize Competition in London and they will be competing with 50 finalist over the world for million dollar prize.

Ganpat University student and professors team has extended support for piloting, lab testing, customer survey, discovery and acquisition, R&D for new designs etc. Jointly formed Team - SULIS india will further take care of the activities here in India.

We extend our thank you to Team - SULIS, Honors College and Rutgers University for an opportunity to execute this cross border collaborative project.
