Activity: Hands-on Training ‘IP Awareness for young innovator: Your idea, your right’

A hands-on training program titled “IP Awareness for Young Innovators: Your Idea, Your Right” was successfully organized to create awareness about Intellectual Property Rights (IPR) among young innovators and students. The session was delivered by Mrs. Manauti Chaudhari, Intellectual Property Officer, Community Science Centre (CSC), Anand, who shared her expertise and practical insights on the subject.

The programme was attended by 80 students, reflecting strong interest and enthusiasm toward innovation and intellectual property protection. Mrs Chaudhari explained the basic concepts of Intellectual Property, including patents, copyrights, trademarks, designs, and geographical indications, simply and interactively. She emphasized the importance of protecting innovative ideas and guided students on the process of filing IP applications, common mistakes to avoid, and the role of IP in academic research, startups, and entrepreneurship.

The session was highly interactive, with students actively participating through questions, discussions, and real-life examples. Practical demonstrations and case studies helped participants understand how intellectual property can be used as an asset for personal, academic, and professional growth.

Outcome of the Event

- Participants gained clear understanding of Intellectual Property Rights and their relevance in innovation and research.
- Students became aware of the procedures for IP filing and protection in India.
- The programme encouraged students to think innovatively and safeguard their ideas at an early stage.
- It fostered an entrepreneurial and research-oriented mindset among young innovators.
- The event strengthened awareness about legal and ethical aspects of innovation, contributing to responsible research and development.
