A Report on Start-Up Orientation

About the event:

The Start-Up Orientation Programme for the first-year students was organized on 16th July, 2026, by Dr. Yashavant Patel, Head, Mechanical Engg. Dept., ADIT, Dean, Entrepreneurship Cell, CVM University with the aim of giving idea of innovation into law students.

Dr. Yashavant Patel began the session with an engaging question, asking students why they pursue education. While most students responded that they study to earn an income, he encouraged them to reflect on the importance of acquiring knowledge and developing an innovative mindset.

Sir explained the distinction between discovery and innovation, emphasizing that innovation is the key to creating value and achieving long-term success. He discussed common reasons for the failure of innovation and illustrated his points with several practical examples, encouraging students to adapt to changing needs through modern technologies and creative thinking.

The session also introduced students to the concept of Agentic AI and highlighted its growing relevance in today's world. Sir further explained the immense entrepreneurial opportunities available in the legal profession by sharing successful examples of law-based start-ups that have achieved remarkable growth and substantial turnover. He motivated students to think beyond conventional career paths and explore innovative business ideas within the field of law.

Additionally, he provided valuable information about various government-supported start-up schemes and entrepreneurial support initiatives available through CVM University, along with the application process for these programs. The session was highly informative and motivational, inspiring students to cultivate an entrepreneurial mindset and explore innovative opportunities in the legal profession.
